Most people will unite with the Hon. KESWICK in condemning the action taken by Bishop RAIMONDI and the Roman Catholic clergy with regard to the education of Catholic children in the Colony. That there has been a good deal of interference with the parents in this matter we are able to state most positively. Bishop Balmond has always an American correspondent, show that these sum to rebuild the old St. Joseph's Church. pumalows from Amoy; and last, but not least, regarded that excellent and useful institution. the Central School, with special abborrence the part of a large American manufacturing that he should oppose the grant to build a -as a godless school, and has used his utmost endeavours to draw Catholic children from it Within the last three months he has succeeded The goods will probably be sold at the best offer chapel for their use. The Portuguese show their appreciation of the educational facilities there afforded by sending their children in considerable numbers in spite of the expressed wish to the contrary of their spiritual advisers. The heads of the school have no right of anthority to deny these children admission, and they have, of course, on application, invariably time in which to pay it. He stated that he was been received. excommunication or the withholding o ecclesiastical rites—which it is reported has been done is tyranny of the worst kind. For its exercise there can, in the eyes of free men, be no justification. It is contrary to the principles and practice of true religion; it smacks more of the Inquisition than of the mild and gracious teachings of Christianity. Such tyrannical pretensions are especially repugnant to British notions of religious liberty, and they will always provoke bostility whenever advanced on British soil. No oppression is so interferes with the social relations of a com-

RUSSIAN FINANCE.

The Economist says :- First of all, there is no doubt about the generally satisfactory progress: of the revenue. It is in the principal indirect taxes where the main progress has taken place. The excise on alcoholic liquors has increasedfrom about 184 millions sterling in 1867 to 224 millions in 1870, and 241 millions in 1873 -a total increase of six millions in six years. Just as we drank ourselves out of the Alabama claims in 1872, so the Russians, in a great measure have drunk themselves out of their deficit. The customs have also increased from about five millions sterling in 1867 to £5,662,000 in 1870. and £7,464,000 in 1873. We cannot follow the direct taxes quite so far back, owing the a transfer of items in 1869; but since that/date there has been an increase of what are called "I'mports Personnels" from about £12,509,000 to £12,808,000 in 1873. Stamps here also increased from about £326,000 in 1867 to £965,000 in 1870, and £1,213,000 in 1873; and registration duties from £410,000 in 1867, to £625,000 in 1870, and £1,021,000 in 1873. Some of this improvement has been due to an increase of the THE Undersigned having been appointed rates of the taxes, this being especially the onse with regard to the duties on alcoholic liquors; but, apart from this, there has been some of $65,000, on first-class risks at current rates. augmentation of the taxes at the old rates. while the fact that the country has yielded more from the increased rates is a proof, at least, that there were untaxed resources to draw upon to cover the deficit.

THE BRITISH NAVY The Times, commenting upon the letters of Mr. Brassey advocating for our navy a flotilla one of torpedo ships and a cla. of swift and nimble steam rame, and the reply from Sir Spencer Robinson in support of our ironeled eystem; points to conneed of unarmoured cruisers for the defence of our commerce in time of war. It uppears to us (The Times says) that for the protection of our commerce a few very fast frigates, ornising singly, like the Inconstant, Raleigh, or Shah, may be of immense value in deterring ordinary privateers from assailing some important lines of ocean commerce; but that the great want of the navy is 13-knot corvettee, of which, if possible, the sailing power should be equal to that of the Galatoa, Mr. Brassey tells us that we can obtain this speed from corvettes of the Active class, five of which can be built for the cost of one Shah, For cruising in the Pacific or distant seas there must still be room for frigates of the Mersey. or Galatea class, which are justly described as " yessels without a rival in any European navy." When it is thus admitted on all hands that unarmoured cruisers are the crying want of the navy, that our commerce now presents the THE Undersigned baving been appointed rebest prey that any country ever offered to an enterprising foe, and that a vost number of pared to GRANT INSURANCES at Current cruisers would be required to defend it, it does Rates. seem to us surprising that the present Government should he doing so little to supply so imperious a necessity. When Mr. Childers was making , his reductions in naval expenditure, he proposed to build in every year 19,500 tons, of which 12,000 were to be armoured and 7,500 ... unarmoured ships, and calculated that this, if continued, would give us always 200,000 tons of wooden chipping, which would suffice for the wants of the service. But the programme of the present year was to build 10,350 tons of armoured and only 3,453 tons of unarmoured

shipping, or less than half of what, in the days of ironclad ascendency, Mr. Childers thought the normal supply of unarmoured ships for the British navy.

The managers who for years refrained from producing the work, in the belief that it would entail upon them inevitable loss, are said to have cleared many thousands of pounds; and it will be a long while before the "Lohengrin" fever of the 1875 season passes quite away. Its rise and progress may be thus recorded :-

"The church was tastefully decorated by The production of Richard Wagner's the skilful hands of the young ladies of the Lohengeth has been the "event" of the past parish, assisted by the curate." This statement may be accepted by the future ecolesinstical historian as a gonuine record of fact. Young ladies and curates being brought together, the resultant is church decorations. No domestic hindrance stands in the way of the British maiden as she seeks to escape all risk of the traditional "mischief" attendant on "idle bands," and sets her "hands" instead to "works of labour and of skill" in decorations, with the assistance of the curate." But curates are scarce; and where they are found they are not usually gregarious. The appearance of a solitary curate may correspond to that of a solitary magpie, and may be only the harbinger of sorrow. He is seldom eligible; and even where he has expectations, among many young ladies he is but one. He can be depended upon with tolerable certainty to carry and to mount the decorative ladder; but "our brothers," even though they may be avilable, too often prove the quintessence of excellence.
